'Craig's Wife' to Play U.W. Theater Thursday, Friday

"Craig's Wife," called a great play about a little theme, emerges again into stage life next Thursday and Friday evenings at 8 in the University theater, under the direction of Prof. Carl B. Cass.

The show, written by George Kelly, was produced on Broad way a number of seasons past and elicited much favorable comment. One critic called it an "admirable example of a first-rate play in which the dramatist has not taken a theme beyond his ability."

Presenting Mrs. Craig, playthis summer by Dieckhoff, as the fanatical "to see her husband smoke in hell than in the living room,' the plot centers around her excessive love for her home and its consequences upon the family.

The cast for second show on The cast for the second show on the University theater's summer playbill includes number of players already well known by Madison audi-

500 Get Music School Certificates

Over 500 pupils of the Wisconsin School of Music received honor certificates last week, and 100 more will receive them by the end of the summer session on Aug. 5. Honor certificates a r e awarded only to those who have four red seals on their merit certificates, and denote a complete year of satisfactory work, together with public appearance in club and recital programs, and a perfect record on practice requirements. A gold seal is affixed for each such year, and the honor certificate is signed by the school director, Miss Elizabeth Buehler, and the teacher of the child receiving it.

The merit certificate holds four red seals, each of which represents one term of satisfactory work, and only when all four terms are so sealed, are the honor certificates given.

Piano pupils who won certificates for the past year were from the classes of Elizabeth Buehler, Olive Endres, Bobye Hanesworth, Stanley Johnson, Stella Kayser, Lydia Lurass, Lucille Olson, Margaret Otterson, Esther Risley, Idelle Strelow, Bernice Swift Jennie Taylor, Adelaide Vroman, and Gladys Willett.

Violin pupils of Marie Endres and Miss Strelow received honors as did readers from the classes of Bobye Hanesworth, Lorraine Miller, and Maud Nichols.

Too Few Children, France to Tax Bachelors

PARIS-(U.P)-Government officials said Saturday night that increased tax would be levied on bachelogs in France in connection with Premier Edouard Daladier's campaign to halt the declining birthrate At the same time, bonuses will be granted to French families principally peasants ... having a large number of children.

Search For Hans DICTATORSHIP IN THE MODERN WORLD. Edited by Guy Stanton Ford. Revised Edition, University of Minne-sota Press, $8.58.

REVIEWED BY GRAYSON L. KIRK

The first edition of this admirable collection of essays appeared nearly four years It ran through two printings and received the praise of reviewers everywhere. Now it has been thoroughly re-worked. Six of the original essays have been revised by the authors and there are nine new contributions. To add to this the editor conceived the happy idea of a final chapter containing a chronology of important dates from 1917 down to the pres-It is needless to say that this feature greatly enhances the value of the volume for reference purposes.

It is difficult at best to review any book in which the work of 14 different authors has been collected together. In general, however, one can say that the scope and plan of the book is excellent. There are separate chapters on Italy, Germany, Russia, and Turkey, and regional chapters on Cen-Europe, Latin America and the Far East.

To these have been added a number of chapters which are functional, rather than political or geographical, in character. Thus, Max Lerner opens the volume with a revised es-say on "The Pattern of Dictatorship," Calvin Hoover contributes a chapter on "The Economics of Fascism," Peter Odegard discusses "Propaganda and Dictatorship,". Mildred Adams writes on "Women Under the Dictatorships," and Sigmund Neumann analyzes the function of "The Political Lieutenants in Modern Dictatorship." Denis Brogan has written a concluding chapter on the familiar theme, "The Prospects for Democra-

These functional chapters are more provocative, of course, than those which describe the already familiar institutions and organizations of the state under dictatorship. Professor Lerner is much less cheerful than Professor Brogan about the future prospects of democracy in a totalitarian world.

The latter is reason a blv confident that we have learned important lessons from the communists and the fascists. Thus, he believes that the business man will be less impressed in the future with fascism because of the troublesome waters in which German economic life is now floundering.

"After the German example. we are hardly likely to hear such confident predictions from business men of the golden economic future which results from getting rid of "government by talk;" "putting the affairs of a country into the hands of men of action;" and the like.

As for the lesson of communism, "it is being increasingly realized that revolutions are not made by brilliant theoretical demonstrations that a revolutionary situation exists; that revolutions are made by arms, not by theses -and that the chances of success, or even of any kind of propaganda, are not increased by constant denigration of democratic methods of by hard-boiled scorn for such ies are nearly always neat and facile. They are also self-conscious, "Some Like Them Short" is a collection of his better tales. "Tune The Old Cow Died

Another good story is "Time and Leigh Brothers," a yarn about a man who suddenly decides to live pleasurably and fully after years of living under the dictatorship of clock, his stomach and his pocketbook.
