way is Mischa Auer, the town's volatile barber, and it's the kind of role that nobody plays so well as he. The scene in which Auer has trouble with a temperamental barber chair is one of the comedy highlights of the picture.

Dennis O'Keefe and Peggy Moran, who supply the romantic interest, have the best roles of their careers. In addition, the desperate prizefight between O'Keefe and Guinn "Big Boy" Williams is one of the most realistic ever put on the screen.

The supporting cast is generally excellent and the players contribute much in maintaining the spirit of the play. Singled out for honorable mention are Spencer Charters, Ed Brophy, Bennie Barlett, Thurston Hall, Jack Carson, Virginia Brissac and George Moran, Moran will be remembered as half the famed "Two Black Crows" team of Moran and Mack, and he appears now as a taciturn Indian.

When a lovely eastern girl falls in love with a western bad man and tries to set him straight, there's action and romance aplenty store. The man is Victor Jory, the girl Jo Ann Sayers, the picture suddenly shocked into resigning. Zane Grey's "The Light of Western Stars," scheduled to open office his secretary Joan Reed.
