SCOTT'S SCRAP BOOK

By R. J. Scott

JEWELERS CUT VERSES IN-SIDE "POSY RINGS"
Long ago the story grew up that the fourth finger of the left hand had a special nerve which led straight to the heart. There is no truth behind that story, but it is believed to explain a custom which has lasted to the present day. A wedding ring is placed on the fourth finger of a woman's left hand, the same finger on which she wears an engagement ring.

During the Middle Ages in Europe, rings were used at weddings the same as they are now. An old picture, made in the time of Columbus, shows a young man taking his bride-to-be to a shop to buy a wedding ring. That event has been repeated many times since then!

About 400 years ago, the custom of buying "posy rings" grew up. These rings, used at weddings, had short mottoes or verses in them. The name "posy" was short for "poesy" or "poetry."

Example of verses engraved on the rings are these:
"Our contract was heaven's act."
"In thee, my choice, I do rejoice."
"My heart and I until I die."
Among the mottoes which jewelers cut inside the rings were:
"Let Love Increase."
"Love me and leave me not."
Early in the past century, French jewelers spelled out short mottoes with precious stones. This custom spread to England, where one jeweler made the motto "Love Me" with six gems. He did it by placing, in order, a lapis lazuli, an opal, a peridot, a malachite and then another emerald. If you follow the initials of those gems, you will see how "Love Me" was spelled.

Another odd kind of ring dates back to the time of Queen Elizabeth, but that queen never owned one. I am thinking of the "gimmel ring." This ring was made in two or three parts each of which could form a separate ring.

When a three-part gimmel was bought at the time of the engagement, one part was handed to the witness and the other parts went to the young man and young woman. When the marriage took place, the three parts were put back together, and the complete gimmel was placed on the bride's finger.
