

Action Beneath Atlantic Shown On Sigma Screen

Tunneling beneath a river is no easy project but to tunnel under the Atlantic ocean would be something worth seeing. "Trans-Atlantic Tunnel" now playing at the Sigma theatre is truly that and more. It is filled with thrills from beginning to end and will undoubtedly keep you on the edge of your seat the biggest part of the time.

Russian guerrilla fighting is known to be fierce and terrifying in every respect and each incident of this type of battle portrayed with the vividness that marks a Russian soldier can be seen in "Days of Glory" now showing at the Ohio theatre.

Our government has told us time and again not to purchase goods from the black market, yet we pay no heed and many of the black markets still continue to function. Without the help of every citizen, the black market will continue to grow, and grow, and grow.

The heroic last chapter in the lives of a handful of Russia patriots inside the Nazi lines is the stirring basis of "Days of Glory."

Toumanova, famous premiere danseuse of the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo and Gregory Peck, distinguished stage actor, make their screen debuts in the starring roles. Peck portrays the military commander of the little guerrilla group, and Toumanova has the role of a ballet dancer forced to seek refuge at the band's hideout in the cellars of a ruined monastery.

The romance which springs up between the two as they do their part in perilous sorties against the enemy forces surrounding them motivates the compelling action of the story. This builds to a memorable climax on the crucial day when the great Russian counter-attack begins and the guerrilla band finds itself battling the Nazi tanks to a hopeless but glorious finish.

Thrills . . . when the nation's newest billion dollar racket is cracked wide open by the man who started it! Drama . . . the boss racketeer of them all takes orders from a new boss—Uncle Sam! Romance . . . he knew all the angles but a girl's love. He finds out

As a result of my many entertainment tours of training camps throughout the nation, and personal interviews with the men in uniform, I am convinced that boys want musicals—films that entertain and give them the "lift" they so greatly need to spur their morale. And when I say, "Take It Or Leave It" is just the thing, I ain't being funny.

Fredric March Guests On New Frank Sinatra Series

When Frank Sinatra presents his first program in the new series that begins Wednesday at 9 p. m. (EWT) over WABC, his visiting guest star will be Fredric March. Along with Sinatra will be his new girl singer, to be announced later, the vocalists and Axel Stordahl's orchestra.

Fredric March has just rid himself of bushy eyebrows and a drooping mustache which he used to portray Mark Twain in the motion picture of the same name.

Substituting for Kay Kyser, the "Ole Professor," Phil Harris, Kay's "College of Musical Knowledge" gang to the Army base at San Luis Obispo, Calif., for the broadcast over Station WEAF Wednesday at 10 p. m. Along with Harris go the Kyser regulars, Ich Kabbable, Sully Mason and the King Sisters.
