awards among these entries. Many of these were purchase prizes, but in some cases the artist was not willing to sell his work for the amount available; hence he received an award but no purchase prize. In others, however, the student received an amount greater than the value he

The jury found no sculpture worthy of a merit award, but one piece received a purchase prize. The trio said, however, that "we consider the general standand of entries to be very high.
There is apparently little direct influence from various styles and
